Michaela Vesela is the Head of English Department at the Faculty of Mechanical Engineering, Brno University of Technology. She is in charge of 10 teachers specialized in teaching technical English and responsible for the curricula of all compulsory English courses.

Michaela Vesela graduated in Teaching English and German Language and Literature from the Masaryk University in Brno in 2006. Her studies involved a one-year study in Germany while working on her thesis.

She has been teaching English since her first year of study in several different countries, including Germany, Spain and the UK.

As the Director of Studies, she has been running St Giles Junior Summer Courses in the UK for the past three summers, coordinating staff of 15 teachers and up to 200 students of more than thirty different nationalities each time.

She has been translating technical papers within Czech, English and German.

At the FME Institute of Foreign Languages, she has participated in several language teaching projects, both national and international. Her area of interest is especially e-learning courses and blended learning. She is currently involved in another major project carried out within the operational programme Education for Competitiveness, developing e-learning modules for the English language training of students and employees at the Brno University of Technology at various levels according to the Common European Framework for Languages.
